What is a Chromebook?

<http://youtu.be/TVqe8ieqz10>

How does it work?

A Chromebook is a laptop that works in the “cloud”

- Access apps and resources online
- Lots of storage online, limited storage on the computer
- Every student has a school email / Google account for use with a Chromebook

How does it work?

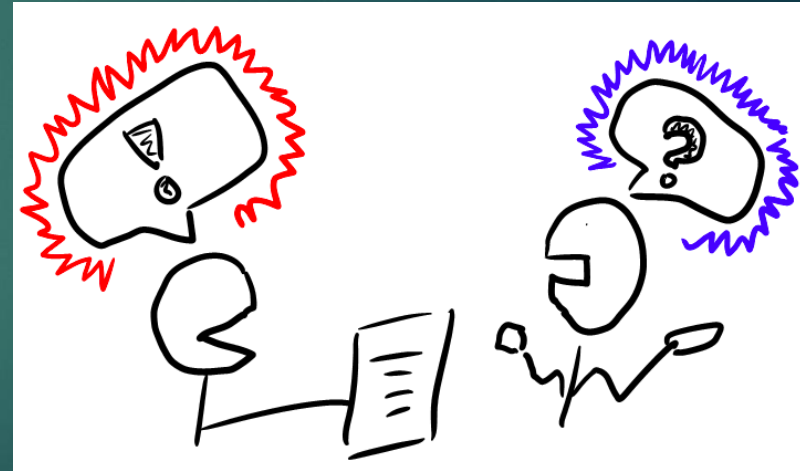

A Chromebook also works without the internet.

- Students complete assignments using their Google Drive off-line.
- These assignments are synched with the online Google drive when students are online.

In a Language Arts class...

Examples of how Chromebooks are used:

- Students create projects using Google Docs
- Students peer-edit each other's work
- Teachers provide real-time feedback to students (written or audio)

In a Science class...

Examples of how Chromebooks are used:

- Students run simulations
- Teachers create “flipped” lessons demonstrating dissections, reactions, etc.
- Students co-create lab reports

In a History class...

Examples of how Chromebooks are used:

- Access online databases for research
- View primary source documents
- Create and share projects

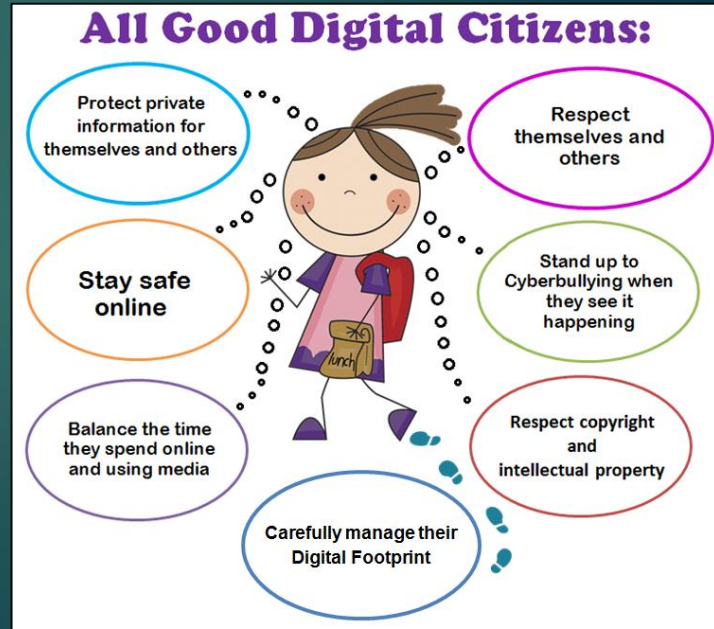

Student Training at Miller

The screenshot shows the homepage of Frank Augustus Miller Middle School. The header features the school's logo (a yellow bird) and name. A navigation bar includes links for Home, About Us, Calendar, Staff Directory, Students, Parents, Contact Us, For Staff, Academics, and Activities. The main content area is titled "1:1 Chromebooks" and includes a sidebar with links for Chromebook Insurance and Student Responsibilities. The central text explains that a Chromebook is a laptop computer that allows students access to apps and resources available on the web, real time collaboration with other students and teachers, ability to do research, create documents and presentations, and much more! All work is stored in the "cloud" which allows for easy access and sharing of information. They're reasonably priced - the Chromebook for students is about $300. At the bottom, there are three links: "Learn about the Acer Chromebook", "Learn about the Dell Chromebook", and "Learn about the Chromebooks in Education".
